12TH CENTURY ENGLAND

The adventures of Robin Hood take place during the reign of Richard 'the Lionheart', from 1189 to 1199. This was a time of social injustice and great economic inequality, and tales of outlaws began to be popular with the common people. These tales were often based on real people, men who tried to escape justice and live a free life in nature. Men like Robin Hood.

THE DOMESDAY BOOK

King William created the first record of all the land in England. This was called the Domesday Book. And thanks to it he knew how much land he owned and how much it was worth.

Why did Robin Hood choose to help the poor of his time by stealing from the rich? To answer this, we must look at the changes in Anglo-Saxon society after William the Conqueror won the Battle of Hastings in 1066. One of the most important changes was the introduction of the feudal system which forced many people to live like slaves. It was a system based on a strict vertical structure, like a ladder, with the king at the top. Everyone on the ladder had to do or give things to the people above them in exchange for a piece of land.

KING

When William became king in 1066, he took all the land from the Saxons who owned it. He now owned ALL the land.

Barons and LORDS

He then gave some of the land to the Norman barons, if they promised to give him money and men for his army.

KNIGHTS

The barons gave some of their land to the knights, if they promised to fight in the king's army.

SERFS

The knights gave some of their land to the common people or serfs. They could stay on the land, but they had to work on it and give much of their produce to the knights. They could not leave the land and were not free men.

In this system, the Church was powerful, and priests had the same status and privileges as the barons and knights.

So it is not surprising that the common people loved Robin Hood and his Merry Men.

Did you know?

There was no paper money in 12th century England; coins were the only currency in use at the time. They were mostly made of silver, gold and copper.

CHAPTER 1

 Many years ago there was a lad from Locksley Town. This lad had deep blue eyes and hair the colour of gold. And he always carried a bow.

One day, the lad saw a poster. It was for an archery competition in faraway Nottingham Town. 'I am good with a bow and arrow. I can win that,' he thought.

So he began walking.

The journey from Locksley to Nottingham was long, but the sun was shining and the birds were singing. The lad walked happily along. Soon, he came to a great forest and he met a group of men. They were eating under a tree. One of them looked up and spoke. He was ugly with big ears.

'Hey, boy,' he said, his mouth full of food. 'Where are you going with that old bow?'

The others laughed, but the lad smiled.

'I'm going to Nottingham,' he said calmly, 'to win the archery competition.'

When the men heard this, they laughed again. But the ugly one laughed the loudest.

'Do you see that deer in the distance?' he asked. 'Hit it and you can have all the money in my bag.'

Without a word, the lad lifted his bow and fired. His arrow flew through the air.

It hit the deer and killed it.
